About the Webinar

The outbreak of the Covid-19 pandemic has altered the definition of “normalcy” in our lives beyond imagination. Like all other aspects of life on our planet, the stakeholders of the teaching-learning environment must adapt themselves to meet the challenges posed by the upheavals that have been caused by the virus. It is undeniable that information and technology tools will go a long way in aiding education especially at this time when physical distancing is needed. We eagerly look forward to the discussion and opening up new vistas of knowledge facilitated by our august resource persons

The webinar aims to

- Positively influence decision-makers, administrators of universities and colleges, and other stakeholders to inculcate the best practices related to academic environment that emerge out of the webinar into their methods of governance.
- Influence faculty members and students to adapt their teaching and learning methods to the changing nature of academia.
- Inspire researchers to undertake further meaningful research on various avenues of knowledge opened up by erudite deliberations in the webinar.

Target audience

Academicians, professors, teachers, researchers, students, policy-makers related to education, independent educationists, and all others genuinely interested in the changing nature of education caused by the pandemic, are cordially invited.
